And while we honour those that served in Afghanistan, we will also remember the 250 sailors, soldiers, airmen and all those who have served aboard HMCS Regina. Their work, as part of the multinational maritime task force, operated in terrorem across the Red Sea, Gulf of Aden, Indian Ocean and the Gulf of Oman, is important and appreciated. They too serve our nation with great pride and distinction.

The local National Day of Honour Ceremony will be held at CFB Esquimalt on Friday May 9 to recognize those who fought and those who died, and to salute those who contributed to Canada’s mission in Afghanistan.

The event takes place at 9:45 a.m. in front of the Wall of Valour located below the Wardroom. The Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, Judith Guichon, will be the Reviewing Officer, and two minutes of silence will be observed at 10:30 a.m. to salute the valour of all those who contributed to Canada’s mission in Afghanistan.

The parade is a tribute to honour the more than 40,000 Canadian Armed Forces members who served their country in during this extensive mission.

Canada’s mission in Afghanistan came at a significant cost. Over the 12-year campaign, the Canadian Armed Forces deployed the largest number of service men and women overseas since the Second World War. The end of Canada’s engagement in Afghanistan represents the closure of a significant chapter of Canada’s military history.

Public parking will be available behind the Archie Browning Sports Centre at 1151 Esquimalt Road and shuttles will be provided on Lyall Street between the arena and the base from 9 to 9:45 a.m. before the ceremony, and until 11:45 a.m. after the ceremony.

An impassioned insider’s view of the Canadian soldier’s war in Afghanistan and why it matters. “A line in the Sand” is based upon journal entries written by Captain Wiss. The entries share the efforts and achievements made by the many Canadian’s who served.

Trevor Greene, a reservist in the Canadian Forces, was deployed to Afghanistan, leaving behind his fiancée, Debbie, and his young daughter, Grace. On March 4, 2006, after arriving in Kandahar Province, Trevor removed his helmet confident that a centuries old pact would protect him from harm. Without warning, a teenager boy under the influence of the Taliban walked up to him and landed a rusty axe in his skull, nearly splitting his brain in two. “March Forth” is a remarkable story of love told in two. “March Forth” is a remarkable collection of first-hand accounts written by soldiers, doctors and aid workers on the front lines of Canada’s war in Afghanistan. Visceral, intimate and captivating in ways no other telling could be. Features nearly two dozen stories by Canadians on the front lines in Afghanistan, including the previously unpublished letters home of Captain Nichola Goddard, the first female NATO soldier killed in combat.

Canadian Army patrol Charlie Company stumbled into a massive group of Taliban forces. The Canadians found themselves up against opponents who were suicidally brave, cunning at planting mines and roadside bombs, and experienced at disappearing into scenery. “Contact Charlie” documents the series of battles between Taliban and Canadian Forces.

Lookout asked this question:

What does the National Day of Honour mean to you?

Having a day like that is good for the morale of military personnel, letting them know their efforts do not go unrecognized.

CP02 (Ret’d) Richard Barrette

It’s a fantastic chance to commemorate the sacrifice of Canadians in Afghanistan. I have friends who have served over there and it’s important to recognize people like that.

Lt(N) Les Gunderson

I think it’s a great way to honour the people who served in Afghanistan. Having it aside from other commemorative days highlights their service and work in our modern age.

Ls Benjamin Jarrett

I think it’s very timely as people of the current generation now know veterans, or are veterans. Acknowledging these people for their work is an important part of service, and I welcome it.

Sgt Dan Bodden

A lot of Canadians went through some pretty terrible things in Afghanistan, looking to help people and make a difference. They deserve to be recognized.

L(N) Sarah Chenier

Canadian soldiers, sailors, and air men and women are ordnary people doing an extraordinary job for Canada. The movie can be found at www.afghanistanacanadianstory.ca, which aims to create a commemorative album that will allow those who served Canada in Afghanistan an opportunity to share their raw experiences with the Canadian public.

In 2008, Ryan Flavelle, a reservist in the Canadian Army and a student at the University of Calgary, volunteered to serve in Afghanistan. For seven months, 24-year-old Flavelle, a signaler attached to the Princess Patricia’s Canadian Light Infantry, endured the extreme heat, long hours and occasional absuridity of life as a Canadian soldier in this new war so far from home.

In the days leading up to the official end of the Afghan mission, Global News brought viewers a special series called “A Soldier’s Story.” This four part series tells the heartwrenching stories of various Canadian soldiers and what their life was like while serving in Afghanistan both in combat and at home. globalnews.ca/news/1204739/a-soldiers-story-marking-the-end-of-canadas-mission-in-afghanistan/

Since 1951, the Canadian Mental Health Association has commemorated Mental Health Week during the first week of May. The week is an annual event where organizations across the country bring the mental health message to the forefront. It is designed as a celebration of mentally healthy lifestyles and positive attitudes, as well as a source of information and support. The theme this year is “Tell us how you really feel”.

For Mental Health Week 2014, a number of events will be held within MARPAC, starting with the kick-off celebration on Monday May 5. From 0630-0800, the Admiral and his Chief of Staff, along with members from various organizations (EAP, MFRC, PSP), will be meeting people at the front gates of both Dockyard and Naden with coffee and green ribbons. The green ribbons are the international symbol for challenging the stigma of mental health issues and encouraging open dialogue. Keep an eye on the Noticeboard for additional events throughout the week.

Below is the Mental Health Continuum Model that helps some to visualize the various states of mental wellness/illness. Ultimately the goal is to have everyone reside “in the green” at all times, but this simply isn’t realistic. Mental illness is only one of many reasons why people migrate towards yellow/orange/red. Things such as grief, stress and trauma can all impact an individual’s mental well-being. Regardless of the reason, the earlier someone receives help, the sooner they will move out of orange/red end of the continuum model and back towards a healthier state of mind. If you or someone you know is struggling, please reach out to one of the many resources available to DND members and their dependants. If you aren’t comfortable speaking to someone in your organization, members from EAP, MFRC, PSP and the Chaplains are always available. Additionally, there is 24 hour a day (365 days a year) support available for both civilian and military members at 1-800-268-7708. This is a completely confidential service that will help members determine what assistance is required.

The harrowing work of bomb disposal

Shawn O’Hara
Staff Writer

It’s been seven years since the white Afghanistan dust coated his uniform, but MS Keith Bruce continues to remember his eight months service as an Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) technician in the war torn country.

Many of those days were spent “outside the wire”, combing the landscape for booby traps, and when necessary, skillfully disarming bombs to put an end to their destructive role.

From August 2006 to February 2007 he called the Kandahar Air Field (KAF) home, and members of the 2 Combat Engineer Regiment his family.

While his regiment maintained a headquarters at KAF, he spent most of his time living in the surrounding territory. “I’d be on base for a day or two and spend a few weeks in the field,” he says. “The barracks were nice, but for most of the deployment we were sleeping on or in our vehicles, or on a cot beside. It was a rough go, but we had a job to do.”

The job of EOD/IED technicians was a multi-faceted one. Besides the gruelling and dangerous work of disarming a bomb, they also conducted Post-Blast Forensics. This work had them investigating the scene of a detonation to try and glean as much intelligence about the device. This job took up much of MS Bruce’s time during Operation Medusa, the largest Canadian-led offensive in Afghanistan.

“If a vehicle was damaged or destroyed, or someone was killed in a blast, we would investigate the area afterwards to try and find information,” he says. “Anything that could be used at the HQ to identify the bomb maker, or figured out the materials used would be catalogued by us and sent back.”

Sometime MS Bruce and his team would have to remove casualties from vehicles to be transported back to base. At these moments he considered his own mortality. “Before I left I thought about the possibility of me not coming back,” he says. “There was always the possibility that I’d have to kill, but I could also be killed. It’s just the way it was.”

Improvised Explosive Devices were a common tactic of the Taliban, and many Canadian and Allied military personnel succumbed to them. The sailor recalls one horrific day when his team was tasked to investigate a dump truck that had been stolen the day before only to turn up in the centre of a small village, south west of Kandahar.

Improvised Explosive Devices were a common tactic of the Taliban, and many Canadian and Allied military personnel succumbed to them. The sailor recalls one horrific day when his team was tasked to investigate a dump truck that had been stolen the day before only to turn up in the centre of a small village, south west of Kandahar.

Deploying with his EOD team, as well as two tanks for protection, they found the truck burnt out and sitting in the street. “We could see heads popping in and out of windows, but the tanks must have changed some minds,” he recalls. “A team went out on foot to check the truck, and unfortunately they hit an IED buried near it. It took out four people including their medic, so we had to get a medevac. It was a hairy situation.”

During operations, if a Taliban bunker or similar structure was found, MS Bruce, the smallest and most experienced on the team, would enter to look for explosives.

“You don’t get used to that. Squeezing into those tiny spaces, not knowing what you’re going to find,” he says. “I thought about my family, and what we were doing there, and that’s all I could do.”

As National Day of Honour nears, MS Bruce’s thoughts wander to Canada’s mission in Afghanistan.

“A lot of people gave up a lot of things over there, some of them their lives. We did it because we thought we could maybe change things, help people, give them a chance to live the way they wanted,” he says. “A lot of people take for granted the lives they get to live in Canada. People in other parts of the world live under a gun, never sure what’s going to happen. I hope we made a difference, even if just for a few people.”

INTERVIEW

Kara Tibbel
Staff Writer

In 2008, Sergeant Sean Wickett deployed to Afghanistan, as crew commander with the The Grey and Simcoe Foresters, a Primary Reserve infantry regiment of the Canadian Forces. Within the Canadian Army, it is part of the 4th Canadian Division’s (formerly known as Land Force Central Area) 31 Canadian Brigade Group. His crew’s job was to escort unarmed logistic vehicles travelling throughout Afghanistan. As National Day of Honour approaches, he took a moment to reflect on his 11 years of military service, and his seven month deployment to the war torn nation.

What drove you to join the military?
I joined the military for many reasons; one being the education I would receive, family tradition and I wanted a job that would give me the ability to travel.

When was your first tour of Afghanistan and how long were you there?
My first tour to Afghanistan was in 2008 and I was deployed there for seven months.

How long were you in the military before being deployed?
I was in the military for six years before my first deployment overseas.

What is your role in the military and how did that articulate once in Afghanistan?
At the time of my deployment, I was a Master Corporal in the infantry with the Grey and Simcoe Foresters where I was employed as a section commander. Once arriving in Afghanistan I was employed as a crew commander for force protection. The position of Crew Commander gave me the opportunity to learn new systems and overcome challenges.

How many men and woman in your division served a long side with you?
There were 35 men and one woman in my Platoon.

Do you feel you personally served a purpose in Afghanistan?
I feel, as a group, we served a huge purpose and made changes by trying to work with the locals whenever possible.

How did you work past the common fear of dying while trying to do your job in Afghanistan?
We all just did our jobs and what was expected of us to complete the task at hand. Sometimes there was more danger than other times, but we just focused on the job and did what needed to be done.

Do you have any good memories of Afghanistan?
There are a lot of good memories from my tour in Afghanistan. I worked with a good group of guys, we worked hard and looked after one another.

How has your definition of honour changed after serving in Afghanistan?
My outlook at and how people honour themselves and others was not really changed by my tour, but instead I was shown how people can overcome the hardest of circumstances even under the stresses of everything that tour can drag you through.

What is your greatest memory of coming home for the first time since deploying?
May 9, 2014 is National Day of Honour; a day to remember all Canadian’s who served in Afghanistan over the past 12 years. What does this day mean to you and what will you be thinking?
I would say that coming home to many friends and family would have been the best part of leaving Afghanistan.

Have strangers stopped you and thanked you for your service? If yes, what does that mean to you?
I will be thinking of those I was deployed with, and of course of those that did not come home with us. We were lucky everyone in my platoon came home. We only had one incident where someone was hurt, a vehicle roll over. That being said, our military is a small family and many of us knew of those that paid the ultimate sacrifice.

There has been many times before and after my tour where I was pulled aside and thanked by an average person walking down the street. We Canadians seem to do things in our own little ways; for some it is offering to buy a coffee or a simple “thank you.” I believe we have the support of the country and they have always shown it when it matters.

Local poet and Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) veteran Cpl (Ret’d) Ed Brown has hung up his uniform and taken up the pen. The 19-year veteran of the CAF recently self-published “A Soldier’s Fortune and Other Poems: Moving Past PTSD and Creating a Fun-Loving Life.”

The book is a collection of Brown’s musings on his struggles with Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), life in the military, and the personal effects of war.

“I wanted to put my work out there as a way of showing others who suffer from PTSD that there’s help for them,” says Brown. “I came from a very old school of thought, that if you were hurting and needed help you just sucked it up and did your job. That isn’t healthy, and it isn’t right. If you need help you have to talk about it.”

During his long and varied career, Brown served in all three branches of the military, seeing three tours of duty including the former Yugoslavia in 1994, Israel and Syria in 2004, and a support mission in Istanbul serving forces in Afghanistan in 2007.

“I came back from Istanbul and I was angry. I was really angry,” he says. “After each deployment I came back with a head full of things I’d rather forget. Losing friends, having your life in mortal danger, the stress, the tension, the fear, it all just became too much.”

Returning home that third and final time Brown took to drugs and drink to keep his demons at bay. His marriage and family life were in shambles, and he was a man on the verge of breaking.

“I dealt with my feelings poorly. It was a really bad time in my life, and I’m not proud of what I did, but I can’t deny it happened,” he says. “I started seeing a psychiatrist, and they suggested I find an outlet for my feelings. I wasn’t sure where to go with it, but eventually I started writing.”

Taking to the written word as a way of dealing with his volatile emotions, Brown began writing poems. Starting with personal pieces, he developed a style and compiled a significant body of work.

“A lot of it is very angry, especially the earlier stuff,” he says. “It was coming from a dark, angry place, so a lot of my feelings about that time and the work I did and what I saw bled into it pretty heavily.”

After a few years of writing Brown had the idea of publishing his work. Working with a local self-publisher he released “A Soldier’s Fortune”, which is now available in print and digital copies through Amazon.

It’s been a really amazing experience, putting myself out there through my writing,” he says. “If people can read my work and realize there are others out there going through the same thing they are, that’s amazing. For civilians, I want people to understand the things service men and women go through, and how it changes them. It’s important and it needs to be said.”

“A Soldier’s Fortune and Other Poems: Moving Past PTSD and Creating a Fun-Loving Life” can be found at www.amazon.com

Besides writing, Ed Brown has also taken up carving to honour his First Nations heritage. He stands proudly holding one of his own designs.

- March 12, 2014: Canada marks the conclusion of its military training mission in Afghanistan, during a flag lowering ceremony in Kabul. The ceremony also recognizes the conclusion of Canada’s current civilian policing mission.

2014
- March 18, 2014: Prime Minister Harper welcomes home the last contingent of Canada’s brave men and women of the Canadian Armed Forces when their flight from Afghanistan arrives in Ottawa.
One of the ways the DND/CAF are commemorating the service of Canadian personnel is through an Afghanistan Memorial Vigil.

The Memorial Vigil contains 190 plaques representing 201 fallen: 158 CAF members, one Canadian diplomat, one Canadian civilian contractor, one Canadian journalist and 40 United States Armed Forces members who were under Canadian command.

The plaques were formerly part of the Kandahar Air Field cenotaph. The cenotaph was a memorial structure for Canadian soldiers to commemorate their fallen comrades while deployed in Afghanistan. The rest of the cenotaph is housed in a warehouse in Ottawa awaiting decision for a permanent home.

The Vigil commemorates the hard work, dedication and sacrifice of CAF members during Canada’s mission in Afghanistan, and recognizes the support of military families, friends, and all Canadians.

The Afghanistan Memorial Vigil will travel across Canada and the United States between May 3 and Oct. 26, 2014. Locally, it will be in Victoria between July 21 and 26 at the B.C. Legislature, and in Vancouver July 29 to Aug. 2 at the Vancouver Convention Centre.
The Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) conducted operations in Afghanistan for more than 12 years in a number of different roles involving air, land and sea assets. Activities included combat, security, development, support and training operations in varying capacities and regions in Afghanistan.

Since the beginning of the mission, more than 40,000 Canadian military members have deployed to Afghanistan, many more than once, making the military engagement the largest deployment of CAF personnel since the Second World War.

THE INTERNATIONAL MISSION IN AFGHANISTAN

Canada was part of a larger NATO-led international security force. The Afghan National Security Forces (ANSF) made significant progress since 2001. The Canadian contributions to Operation Enduring Freedom were designed to provide the tools necessary to sustain their own security. Afghanistan’s challenges cannot be overcome by military means alone. As well as military personnel, the Canadian effort in Afghanistan included diplomats, development workers, police officers, and experts in human rights, good governance, the rule of law, and the institutions of a healthy democracy. This wide range of expertise was assembled to bring a whole-of-government approach to the complex task of nation-building.

The CAF were one component of this effort that also included other Canadian government departments, such as:
• the Department of Foreign Affairs, Trade and Development Canada;
• the Royal Canadian Mounted Police;
• Canadian civilian police departments;
• Public Safety;
• Correctional Services Canada; and
• Canada Border Services Agency, among others.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES OPERATIONS IN AFGHANISTAN

Following the terrorist attacks on the United States on Sept. 11, 2001, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 1368 condemning the attacks and supporting international efforts to root out terrorism in Afghanistan. On Oct. 7, 2001, the United States and the United Kingdom launched Operation Enduring Freedom to dismantle the Al-Qaeda terrorist network in Afghanistan and to remove the Taliban regime from power. On the same day, Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chrétien announced that Canada would contribute air, land and sea forces to the international campaign against terrorism. Operation Apollo, the CAF contribution to the campaign, officially began, marking Canada’s entry in the international mission.

OPERATION APOLLO

Operation Apollo was Canada’s military contribution to the international campaign against terrorism. Operation Apollo began on October 1, 2001, and ended on October 31, 2003. At sea, Canada was the first coalition nation to deploy a dedicated naval task group and other ships to support international forces fighting the al Qaedainst. In total, five different ships deployed to region to:
• support military operations in Afghanistan
• participate in the defence of United States Navy ships transporting US ground and air forces; and • support multinational counter-terrorism activities in the region at sea.

In 2003, RCAF deployments carried more than 3.4 million kilograms of cargo, transported 2,300 passengers and logged over 4,300 flying hours. In December 2003, the naval commitment to Op Apollo ended after four rotations. Between January 2004 and October 2008, Canadian ships continued to deploy to the region to support the international campaign against terrorism as part of Operation Alcove.

UNAMA AND ITS MANDATE

UNAMA was established on March 26, 2002, by UN Security Council Resolution 1401 with a mandate to support the reconstruction and national reconciliation processes set out in the Bonn Agreement of December 2001. UNAMA’s mandate has since been renewed several times, most recently on March 17, 2014 as part of UN Resolution 2145 (2014). UNAMA has several functions, including:
• lead and coordinate international efforts in assisting Afghanistan with its transition while reinforcing Afghan sovereignty, leadership and ownership;
• support the organization of elections and the sustainability, integrity and inclusiveness of the electoral process;
• support peace and reconciliation efforts;
• assist in increasing greater coherence, coordination and efficiency among UN agencies, funds and programs in Afghanistan; and
• coordinate and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

UNAMA’s primary objective was to support UNAMA aims in the field of security sector reform, security capacity building, and confidence building. MLOs supported these initiatives and developed confidence and cooperation between Afghan and coalition security forces as well as other organizations and agencies. They promoted mutual understanding, trust and synchronization.

OPERATION ACCIUS (NOVEMBER 2002 – JUNE 2005)

Operation Accius was Canada’s contribution of two senior Canadian Forces officers to the Military Advisory Unit of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA)

The UNAMA Military Advisory Unit (MAU) consisted of officers from several nations who served as military liaison officers (MLO) at UNAMA regional offices across Afghanistan. Its primary objective was to support UNAMA aims in the field of security sector reform, security capacity building, and confidence building. MLOs supported these initiatives and developed confidence and cooperation between Afghan and coalition security forces as well as other organizations and agencies. They promoted mutual understanding, trust and synchronization.
In August 2003, phase 1 of Operation Athena began. Canada’s contribution of peace-support and combat forces to ISAF.

For the next two years, Canada provided an infantry battle group and the command element of a multinational brigade (February to July 2004) to help establish and enhance security in and around the capital, Kabul. CAF troops conducted foot patrols, surveillance missions, armed raids on illegal weapons caches and provided security to facilitate elections.

Phase 1 of Op Athena ended in August 2005 and the Canadian task force began transitioning to Kandahar until January 2006. The second phase of Op Athena saw CAF members conducting combat operations in Kandahar province (specifically in the Dand, Arghandab, Panjwayi, and Zhari districts) until July 2011. The CAF remained committed to enabling and contributing to whole-of-government outcomes; building capacity and capability of the Afghan national security forces.

CANADIANS HAVE BEEN INSTRUMENTAL IN ASSISTING IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE CAPACITY AND CAPABILITY OF THE AFGHAN NATIONAL SECURITY FORCES.

With about 15 military and civilian members at its height, the SAT-A included:
- a small command and support element;
- two teams of strategic planners;
- a defence analyst;
- a strategic communications advisor; and
- a development expert.

The SAT-A cooperated closely with the Canadian Embassy and representatives of the Afghan government to provide direct planning support to government ministries and groups responsible for development and governance.

The CAF deployed a robust Special Operations Task Force to Kandahar province that targeted insurgent leaders, contributed to force protection by conducting operations against improvised explosive device facilitators and trained and mentored Afghan Special Forces.

The CAF also fielded Operational Mentor and Liaison Teams (OMLT) to work alongside and within Afghan National Army (ANA) and Afghan National Police (ANP) units. OMLTs worked with ANA and ANP units to deliver training more than 160 Afghan police officers, and also played a key role in training more than 160 Afghan Kandaks (battalion-sized units). In addition, CAF members provided specialized training in fields such as medicine, logistics, signals and air operations.

While this monumental task was occurring, Op Attention was ramping up. Op Attention was Canada’s participation in the NTM-A, which delivers training and professional development support to the national security forces of Afghanistan; the Afghan National Army, the Afghan Air Force, and the Afghan National Police.

Canada’s troop contribution was the second largest within NTM-A which also included providing the organization’s deputy commanding general. Canadians were involved in establishing basic individual recruit training institutions and also played a key role in training more than 160 Afghan Kandaks (battalion-sized units). In addition, CAF members provided specialized training in fields such as medicine, logistics, signals and air operations.

Canadians have been instrumental in assisting in the development of the capacity and capability of the Afghan national security forces to enable them to take responsibility of their own security by Dec. 31, 2014.

OPERATION ARCHER (FEBRUARY – JULY 2006)

The primary activity under Operation Archer was the deployment of about 12 senior CAF members in Kabul with the Combined Security Transition Command – Afghanistan (CSTC-A). The CSTC-A was a US-led multinational organization that provided mentors and trainers to help Afghanistan’s Ministry of Defence and Ministry of Interior train, equip, employ and support the Afghan National Army and the Afghan National Police.

The military nature and coalition structure of Operation Enduring Freedom made it adaptable to a wide range of multinational projects, such as the CSTC-A, designed to help the Afghan authorities build the capacity of new security institutions and the national security forces. These projects were part of the long-term international effort to rebuild Afghanistan’s infrastructure, government and national institutions, including the army and police, that began with the fall of the Taliban in December 2001.

As Canadian Forces Health Services Centre Pacific (CF H Svs C (P)) comes in line with the same challenges that many units have recently faced, a review of the clinic’s approach and processes has been initiated. This review is currently underway. The review outcomes will guide how CF H Svs C(P) aligns its staff and services to continue to provide timely access to high quality health care while supporting operations, as well as the overall health of CAF members. This review will lead to the implementation of gradual changes in processes in order to improve our service delivery.

The clinic would like to remind members that CF H Svs C(P) does not provide emergency services. All emergencies (such as life or limb threatening conditions) shall be addressed by calling 911 or attending the nearest Emergency Room. Sick parade for new, urgent or changing medical conditions occurs 0730-0930 hrs Monday to Friday. During this time, CF H Svs C(P) has focused its effort to maximize its efficiency in addressing sick parade presentations. From 0930-1200 hrs and 1300-1600 hrs Monday to Friday CF H Svs C(P) completes booked appointments and medical reviews. These types of appointments are arranged through CDU reception: CDU 1 – local 4120; CDU 2 – local 5641; and CDU 3 – local 5646. Initiatives to facilitate improved access and lower wait times are underway.

Every member who presents to CF H Svs C(P) is entitled to an assessment of their condition priority even outside of sick parade hours. Members assessed as urgent will be seen. Meanwhile, non-urgent presentations outside of sick parade hours may be redirected to a more appropriate time to have their needs properly addressed. CF H Svs C(P) thanks you for your understanding that these structural changes allow us to balance and manage the competing demands for finite medical resources. Constructive feedback about our initiatives and your experiences at CF H Svs C(P) are appreciated and considered in our adaptation to new staffing and resource levels.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper has issued the following statement announcing an additional measure that Canada is taking to promote security and stability in Central and Eastern Europe:

“Canada remains committed to working with our NATO partners to promote the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ukraine.

“To further enhance the readiness of the Alliance, today, our Government is announcing that we will be committing the HMCS Regina to NATO Standing Maritime Forces. “Our Government will continue taking steps to demonstrate our collective allied strength and to enhance security and stability in Central and Eastern Europe.”
It’s 6 a.m. and the alarm clock is buzzing. You fumble for the off switch and swing your legs over the side of the bed, stretching as your toes search for your slippers. You take a deep breath and consider the morning.

• Coffee, hot: two cream, one sugar.
• Shower, comb your hair, put on your clothes, and brush your teeth.
• Feed the pets.
• Lock the door, start the car, put the car in drive and off you go.

Another day has begun.

You’ve done all of these things every day without conscious thought. Habits, routines, rituals, second nature; call them what you will.

Generally, they are things you do without question and are almost involuntary. Would you consider not brushing your teeth, skipping getting dressed, or not wearing your seatbelt? The consequences of not doing any of these could be inconvenient at best to catastrophic at worst. The same goes for safety habits: if proper procedures aren’t followed, the results could also range from inconvenient to catastrophic.

What are some of your safety habits?

Being knowledgeable of the hazards and risks associated with the activities you do on a daily basis, both at work and at home, is the key to preventing injuries.

Do you wear personal protective equipment (the last line of defence) when required? Do you do a quick scan of the workspace and tools for hazards before starting your work?

In safety circles this is called a hazard analysis, but in plain speaking it’s just a good habit called “taking five seconds for safety.”

Many safety habits are legislated such as wearing a seat belt when driving or wearing a bike helmet; however, others are not and are grouped into the common sense category. If we take a couple of seconds to think of what can go wrong before doing a task, we will likely find a way to prevent an accident from occurring.

At the same time, be cautious of bad habits. These ‘human factors’ can lead to accidents if not curtailed in one way or another; indifference can be as bad as impatience or impulsiveness.

If we are always in a hurry, there is a greater likelihood that something important will be overlooked with undesired results. Even if we are experienced and have done this a 1,000 times before, it is good to review procedures from time to time to re-enforce the rules to battle any indifference that might be creeping in.

First Week of May

The first week of May each year is dedicated to continent-wide recognition and promotion of health and safety in the workplace.

This year’s theme for North American Occupational Safety and Health (NAOSH) week is “Make Safety a Habit.” It offers an opportunity to challenge ourselves either individually or as a group to form better safety habits. It could be removing bad habits, such as accelerating through amber lights when driving, or starting better habits like taking five seconds for safety. The challenge is to make these requirements almost involuntary. Pick a habit that works towards preventing injuries or illness and commit to it throughout the year to “Make Safety a Habit.”

This year, a number of MARPAC units have deliberately staged photos to demonstrate what the absence of good safety habits might look like in a variety of scenarios. Personnel are challenged to examine the photos and identify the dangerous work habits. It is a contest open to all MARPAC personnel and is designed to raise awareness, challenge your safety knowledge, and to have a little fun.

There will be a different photo displayed every day during NAOSH week. Simply view the picture and note what’s wrong. Forward your submission via email to:

+ESQ_FSE_Safety@FSE@Esquimalt or to FSafeO, Bldg D9 DKed.

The Base Chief of Staff will conduct one draw per photo from all the correct entries received. Answers will be displayed on the MARPAC Notice Board after the contest closes. You can increase your chances of winning one of the following prizes by submitting an entry for each photo.

There are some great prizes to be won:

• Two first aid kits
• Rona gift card - $100
• Country grocer gift card - $100
• One night Tigh-Na-Mara

Army lawyer lays down the law during Operation Artemis

Lt(N) Mark Fifield
Op ARTEMIS Roto 4 PAO

What is an army legal officer from the Office of the Judge Advocate General doing on a Canadian warship at sea during an overseas deployment in the Indian Ocean?

That was the question on many sailors’ minds when they found that Major Adam van der Linde was going to be on board HMCS Regina for a six to eight month period during Operation Artemis.

The operation demonstrates the Canadian Armed Forces’ commitment to peace and stability in the Indian Ocean/Arabian Sea by maintaining a credible and enduring presence as directed by the Government of Canada. Regina is doing its part to support its allies and security partners in the region by operating within a responsive international force known as Combined Task Force 150 (CTF 150).

In accordance with CTF 150 mandate and international law, Regina has the legal authority to approach, board and search vessels of interest to deter and deny the use of the maritime environment for terrorism or the facilitation of terrorist activities.

However, there are many considerations that must be satisfied before this can be done.

“We need to establish the legal basis to board and search vessels in the Operation Artemis joint operations area, and having legal advice on the ship is key to making that happen in a timely fashion,” explains Cdr Dan Charlebois, Regina’s Commanding Officer. “This allows Regina to search these vessels for illicit narcotics or other contraband used to fund terrorism or other criminal activity.”

Maj van der Linde’s responsibilities include advising the chain of command on all legal issues, such as applying the laws of armed conflict during real time operations at sea, determining sovereign territorial waters from international waters and the application of internal discipline.

A major part of his job during this deployment is to interpret and apply laws such as the United Nations Convention on the Laws of the Sea (UNCLOS).

“This deployment has been one of the most memorable in my career so far as well as a great life experience as I’ve never been to sea with the Royal Canadian Navy before,” said Maj van der Linde. "I love the fact that I am an Army Officer practicing law on board a Canadian warship during an operational deployment as I never know what new challenges and novel legal situations each day will bring.”
HMCS Protecteur sailors stay fit in Hawaii

Last month, personnel from HMCS Protecteur took the opportunity to keep active by running in the 17th Annual Ford Island Bridge Run in Oahu, Hawaii. By doing so many earned top honours.

“It was a beautiful race,” says Lt(N) Jackie Geiger, Deck Officer for Protecteur, who took home first place in the Military Female category. “We’ve been spending a lot of time in Hawaii, so it was nice to have something like this to blow off a little steam.”

Protecteur has been alongside for over a month since a Feb 27 fire disabled the ship. The crew have been flying back in Victoria in small groups, currently leaving about 135 personnel left on board.

“We’re all getting out of here slowly,” says Lt(N) Geiger. “There’s still a lot of work to be done on the ship, but once it’s done we’ll be going home.”

In the mean time, in-between shifts, the crew has been hard pressed to find ways to pass the time. Once the 17th Annual Ford Island Bridge Run rolled around, Deployment Programs Manager David MacDiarmid arranged for some of Protecteur’s crew to take part. “He set everything up, got anyone who was interested to put their name in and worked everything out for us,” says Lt(N) Geiger. “It was really great and put everyone in great spirits.”

The Ford Island Bridge Race is an annual 10K that takes place in Oahu and has runners begin at the Admiral Bernard “Chick” Clarey Bridge and cross to historic Ford Island.

The run itself is very well populated, with 2,514 people registering across civilian and military categories; 19 Protecteur personnel took part.

“It was crazy running with that many people. It was just bodies everywhere you looked,” says Lt(N) Geiger. “It made the run more exciting, not to mention all the beautiful scenery. It was a really great experience.”

Lt(N) Geiger had a time of 46:41, while Protecteur’s MS Kristen Arensen took home third overall female with a time of 42:02. Also representing for Protecteur was LS Max Honeyman, who placed second in the 20-24 age group with 41:03, and LS Kyle Weatherby who placed third in the 25-29 age group at 41:26.
Canada leads a verification team in Ukraine

Three members of the Canadian Armed Forces from the Directorate of Arms Control Verification (DACV), as part of a nine person team, are leading a Vienna Document 2011 (VD11) mission in Ukraine from April 26 to May 11.

In light of current events, Ukraine has requested that participating States from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) conduct a coordinated series of VD 2011 missions within Ukraine (except Crimea). This mission is being conducted in order to dispel concerns regarding unusual military activities in Ukraine, and to ensure a continuous international military presence on the ground.

“Canadian Armed Forces personnel participation in VD11 visits as lead inspectors constitutes a concrete contribution to mitigating the crisis using existing arms control mechanisms. They possess the necessary training and experience to undertake missions of this nature,” says Major-General Michael Hood, Director of Staff, Strategic Joint Staff.

The Canadian Armed Forces members taking part on this mission are joined by representatives from France, the Republic of Moldova, Ukraine and the United States. The mission marks the first time a VD11 visit has been led by Canada to Ukraine during the current crisis. Canada provided two observers as part of the initial multinational military observer mission to Ukraine, at the outset of the Ukraine crisis in March 2014.

Canada is working in close cooperation with the Ukrainian authorities to determine the exact locations that will be subject to the inspections. These inspections are at the invitation of Ukraine over concerns of unusual military activity in the region. Canada is also prepared to contribute inspectors for similar missions in Ukraine led by other participating States from the OSCE.

Canada routinely and regularly participates in OSCE missions in Eastern Europe. The OSCE, the world’s largest regional security organization – comprised of 57 participating States, including all NATO Allies – has been employing a range of arms control and confidence- and security-building measures to respond to the crisis in Ukraine.

The VD11, a politically binding agreement amongst participating States of the OSCE, is one of the arms control mechanisms that has been used so far in Ukraine. Under the VD11, participating States can conduct inspections and observation visits to increase openness and transparency concerning military activities.
The navy honoured two Canadian Armed Forces sailors two weeks ago for their quick work and steady hands following a dramatic rescue of a foundering vessel and its crew off Nanaimo in 2012.

PO2 Kevin Hall, MS Richard Loy and PO2 Anthony Goodwin comprised the Ranger 1 patrol crew that rescued the 11-metre U.S. registered sailing vessel Fugitive and its crew of three Aug. 1, 2012. PO2 Hall and MS Loy, who serve at the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Ranges (CFMETR) in NanOOSE Bay, were on hand to receive the Commander, Royal Canadian Navy Commendation. PO2 Goodwin, since posted to HMCS Protecteur, will be honoured at a later date.

Summer typically marks the busiest time in Area Whiskey Golf, the 200-square-kilometre territorial test range CFMETR operates in the Strait of Georgia. So it was on a Sunday when Ranger 1, conducting a sweep of the range’s southern border in a rigid hull inflatable boat (RHIB), copied a Mayday call from the Fugitive.

“Your whole career you do a lot of amazing things that don’t get a lot of attention, things that are maybe bigger than this one, but then you get recognized for something like this and it kind of makes up for it. I’m really happy to have been a part of this.”

Capt Jeff Manney

The vessel reported taking on water after striking a rock near Ballenas Island, two miles from the nearest anchorage. Range staff immediately dispatched CFMETR’s contracted Bell 206 helicopter and Ranger 1 to the scene. When PO2 Hall and his crew arrived, it was clear that Fugitive’s skipper had already given up the fight for his vessel.

“When we got there they were abandoning the boat and jumping into their dinghy,” recalls Hall. “The skipper was clearly very agitated. Once we got on board we noticed a lot of water inside the boat, but I told him not to panic, it’s not underwater yet.”

Hall quickly took charge of the scene, embarking the skipper’s two adult sons and directing Loy and Goodwin to begin pumping operations. The sailboat’s own bilge pump couldn’t keep up with the water flowing in through the cracked keel, but with weather on his side and some determined bailing Hall assessed they could tow the vessel, if not into port, then at least somewhere it wouldn’t become a navigational hazard.

Quickly rigging the vessel for towing, a task ill-suited to a RHIB, Hall and his team headed for nearby Schooner Cove. Watching the waterline slowly rising on the sailboat, it took all of Hall’s experience, judgement and trust in his crew to continue the operation.

“We weren’t going to put anyone in danger but we were barely keeping up with the flooding. If the Coast Guard hadn’t shown up we would probably have had to abandon it before making port,” he said.

Fortunately the French Creek Coast Guard station responded with their own RHIB and a powerful Wajax water pump. The extra horsepower helped Fugitive make Schooner Cove, where drivers were standing by to keep it afloat.

“They were really happy, shaking our hands and thanking us” said Loy. Ranger 1’s engineer, of the Fugitive’s crew once they had safely docked. For the 25-year veteran, the incident, its happy aftermath and the resulting commendation had him feeling a little philosophical.

Retired Petty Officer Wilks sentenced for sexual assault

A military judge has sentenced a former Canadian Armed Forces medical technician, Retired Petty Officer Second Class James Wilks, to 30 months imprisonment following a second court martial that found him guilty of 10 sexual assault and 15 breach of trust charges.

Lt Col Louis-Vincent d’Auteuil also issued an order requiring the offender to submit bodily substances and register to the Sex Offender Information Registration Act for life. These two provisions are mandatory when found guilty of sexual assault.

Wilks submitted an application for release from imprisonment pending appeal. The Military Judge ruled that Wilks be released from imprisonment pending appeal. The details regarding when the appeal will take place have yet to be determined.

The incidents for which Wilks was found guilty occurred between 2003 and 2009, while he was performing medical examinations in Thunder Bay and London, Ontario. He used the medical exams to see and in some cases touch the women’s breasts, stating it was part of the standard physical, which it was not.

Wilks was previously found guilty of one count of sexual assault and four counts of breach of trust by a public officer, and sentenced to nine months in prison in December 2011.

After military police made a public appeal for victims to come forward in September 2010, the Canadian Forces National Investigation Service charged Wilks with additional offences.

The Canadian Forces Morale and Welfare Services (CFMWS) deployed over 1,000 civilians to Afghanistan from 2003 to December 2013 in support of the Canadian Armed Forces. CFMWS was responsible for the morale and welfare services provided to CAF members while they were deployed to Afghanistan. Morale and welfare services included: Home Leave Travel Assistance, fitness, sports, recreation, special events, amenities, and retail stores (including the Tim Hortons at Kandahar Airfield).
