Victoria Grizzlies give back to MFRC

Peter Mallett
Staff Writer

Esquimalt's Military Family Resource Centre (MFRC) is getting ready to score on a Victoria Grizzlies power play.

The Junior 'A' hockey club recently announced a new partnership that will see the community-based non-profit as the sole beneficiary of fundraising efforts for its Military Appreciation Night on Jan. 25 game against the Cowichan Valley Capitals. The club is offering reduced ticket prices of $10 for all military and DND employees with $5 from every ticket sold for the game going to the MFRC. Tickets can be purchased through their website and the box office at the Q-Centre in Colwood. When purchasing through the website choose military/senior rate for the discount.

The new partnership and other fundraising initiatives surrounding the game were finalized after discussions between MFRC Community Engagement Manager Lisa Church and Grizzlies President Lance Black.

"It's wonderful that the club is reaching out like this to both the MFRC and the military community. Their level of support is very impressive and heartwarming to see," said Church.

Church noted there are other ways her organization will benefit from the event including being the beneficiaries of the team's traditional game-night 50/50 draw.

Grizzlies players will also wear specially designed uniforms for the game, which will be auctioned off to the highest bidders following the game. The black and gold jersey was created by the team's graphic designer Ty Didmon and features a navy frigate on the front.

The MFRC will give one lucky registered youth hockey player, under the age of 18, a chance to participate in opening-game warmups with the Grizzlies. Interested players can fill out an application form available at the MFRC's headquarters on Signal Hill or the Colwood Pacific Activity Centre (CPAC) until Jan. 17. The lucky winner will be announced on Jan. 21.

The Naden Band will also be involved with on-ice activities and will perform O Canada prior to the opening faceoff. Other events on the night include a family-oriented pre-game tailgate party being organized by the MFRC and sponsored by Quality Foods Langford, and an onsite selfie booth where participants can dawn military, police and fire department helmets and equipment.

For more information or to purchase tickets for the game visit the Grizzlies' website: www.victoriagrizzlies.com/

Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel, for the day, Aiden Anderson, along with his sister Courtney Holland and mother Isabella Anderson, experienced army equipment during their visit to Le Régiment de Hull (RCAC), in Gatineau, Quebec, on Dec. 13.

Canadian Army helps fulfil a dream

Steven Fouchard
Army Public Affairs

The Canadian Army appointed its first-ever Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel: a 15-year-old from London, Ontario.

However, the appointment was for just one day; the youth in question, Aiden Anderson, who now has memories to last a lifetime.

That day, Dec. 13, 2018, was just one of five Aiden spent in the Nation's Capital with the help of Make-a-Wish Canada, which grants the wishes of children suffering from critical illnesses.

Though he has been healthy for several years, Aiden was born with a congenital heart defect that has kept him in hospital frequently in the past and required four surgeries over his lifetime.

Aiden, a student at London's Sir Frederick Banting High School, with a keen interest in politics and military history, wished to experience a day in the life of the Prime Minister. His experiences included sitting in on Question Period and hosting a press conference just as the PM would.

In addition to learning about the Prime Minister's role, he was able to cross another wish off his list by spending quality time experiencing the military way of life up close with the army.

His day with the army began with a gathering at which the Army Commander, Lieutenant-General Jean Marc Lanthier, was briefed by other senior leaders at the Army

Headquarters in Ottawa.

Officers around the table introduced themselves to Aiden, who was uniformed in CADPAT, and explained their respective roles. CADPAT, which stands for Canadian Army Disruptive Pattern, is the army's distinctive, disruptive camouflage pattern.

"Your courage, your resilience, your drive, and your quality as a person are inspiring," said LGen Lanthier.

That sentiment was echoed by Major-General Stephen Cadden, Commander of the Canadian Army Doctrine and Training Centre in Kingston, Ontario, who spoke via video conference.

"Your story has inspired a lot of us down here," he said.

LGen Lanthier also shared the collective gratitude of the officers at the briefing who, because of Aiden's visit, had been asked to attend in the looser-fitting CADPAT rather than their usual more formal Distinctive Environmental Uniforms.

Aiden concurred, saying he found the comfortable uniform a relief after several days in Ottawa's political sphere.

"I've been wearing a suit all week," he said.

Next for Aiden was a trip across the Ottawa River to the headquarters of Le Régiment de Hull, an Army Reserve Armoured Corps.

Aiden and younger sister Isabella – who was along for the ride with their mother Courtney Holland – were more than pleased with the reception at Le Régiment de Hull. Members showed them some of the vehicles and equipment used by members.

Both young people enjoyed exploring the regiment's explosives disposal equipment, which included piloting a remotely operated robot. Mom Courtney experienced the weight of a protective bomb suit.

Aiden's knowledge shone through as he correctly identified a Bangalore torpedo, an explosive charge used to clear obstacles such as barbed wire, which he recognized from his studies of the Second World War.

The family was impressed by an up-close look at one of the regiment's Tactical Armoured Patrol Vehicles – an experience made even better when they were invited to ride in the vehicle for the return trip to Ottawa and a meeting with Chief of the Defence Staff General Jonathan Vance at National Defence Headquarters.

Gen Vance presented Aiden with the Chief of Defence Staff Coin. Known as "challenge coins," such coins are a long-standing tradition in military circles. Senior members can award their specific coins to deserving individuals to instill unit pride, improve esprit-de-corps and reward hard work.

"I give it to excellent people," he said. "And you are one of them."

Gen Vance met privately with the family; afterwards they departed for the annual Army Headquarters Holiday Dinner, held at the historic Cartier Square Drill Hall in downtown Ottawa.

Aiden's mother expressed gratitude for the experience on behalf of both children.

"You really have given us first-class treatment," she said. "Thank you."

MARPAC Public Affairs

Can you imagine having a trade, certifications, and a well-paying job with benefits that you enjoy – all without student loans?

That's what Lachlan Palmer has.

When still in high school and just 17-years-old, he applied for a student co-operative education term at Fleet Maintenance Facility (FMF) Cape Breton at CFB Esquimalt. As a successful applicant, he took part in the co-op program after graduating from high school in July and August of 2012. He was paid for his work that summer, making him one of the few students at his age to earn an income so quickly after graduation.

After completing the co-operative education at FMF, he was then offered a four-year apprenticeship program as a pipe-fitter. He began the apprenticeship that November and completed it in 2016 – obtaining his Journeyman Ticket in pipefitting.

Following his apprenticeship, he then "bridged" into full-time employment at FMF. Now at 24, he has been working with FMF for nearly seven years. He also received additional training during that time, which was all paid for by his employer, the Government of Canada. He obtained his steam-fitting/pipe-fitting and gas-fitting tickets, as well as qualifications in high pressure brazing. He is currently one of only two employees at FMF who can conduct brazing work on submarines.

"I am very fortunate that my shop teacher told me about the co-op program when I was in high school, which made all of this possible."

The bonus is Palmer enjoys his job. From working on submarines to checking lines, to working in FMF's new facilities, there's never a dull moment. He enjoys playing a role in getting ships out to sea to protect our coasts through his work.

His connection to ship work has also seeped into his personal life. He purchased a boat which he currently lives on. His work in ship maintenance has enabled him to do his own repairs.

"Compared to most of my peers, I am doing pretty well. I have a good job that I enjoy, a great lifestyle, and no student debt."

Santa drops in at children's party

Peter Mallett
Staff Writer

A deployment to the Indo-Pacific region didn't stop HMCS Calgary and the Esquimalt Lions Club from hosting the 33rd annual Children's Christmas Party.

In previous years the party was held onboard Calgary, but with the frigate deployed on Operation Projection the event was moved to the Gun Room at Work Point.

With landed members from the ship and volunteers from HMCS Winnipeg sporting festive Santa hats and Lions Club members dressed as elves, they played host to a group of 25 deserving public school students from six Victoria elementary schools.

"It's an annual tradition and great to have the community engagement between the Esquimalt Lions club, local schools and the navy," said event organizer, Petty Officer Second Class Brad Warford. "It's great to be able to reach out to the local community and show children what we do and what the navy has to offer."

Retired Saanich Firefighter and Lions Club member Daryl Driemel began his involvement in the Christmas party when it first began back in 1985. He says participating puts a smile on his face every year because the kids really seem to "have a ball."

"That is what makes this event so special because it gives these children some free time away from class where they can experience some holiday joy," said Driemel.

The party kicked off outside of the Gun Room with fire extinguisher and fire hose drills performed by CFB Esquimalt Fire and Rescue. Firefighters also brought their ladder fire truck to show off to the kids and arranged for a visit by Sparky the Fire Safety Dog. Festivities then moved indoors where the children made Christmas crafts and played games before enjoying a lunch of hot dogs and chicken fingers.

But the biggest surprise came at the end of the party with an appearance by Santa Claus himself. That's when Jolly Old Saint Nick handed out personalized Christmas presents to the children.

Game changing mast installation underway on submarines

Peter Mallett
Staff Writer

HMCS Corner Brook will become the first of the Royal Canadian Navy's (RCN) four Victoria-class submarines to be equipped with a new modern mast system.

The hunter-killer submarine is currently stationed in the purpose-built repair facility dock at Victoria Shipyards as workers from Babcock Canada install the L3 Calzoni Universal Modular Mast (UMM). The system, similar to the one fitted in U.S. Navy Virginia-class submarines was acquired under the U.S. Foreign Military Sales program.

Masts are vital to the functioning of any submarine. In Canada's diesel-powered subs they provide air supply, communications, radar, and periscope capability.

Lieutenant-Commander Darryl Gervis, RCN Deputy Director Submarine Combat Systems, says the new technology puts Canada's submarine program on a new course.

"This is a game changer," said LCdr Gervis, referring to the current technological shortfall for Canadian subs, which is the lack of a reliable high-speed satellite data link.

"What the Universal Modular Mast [when coupled with the Protected Military Satellite Communication PMSC antenna] will do is provide near real-time high-speed [antenna] communications with the shore. This will allow for improved picture and video transmission, and quicker transmission of messages, and therefore reduce counter-detection opportunities as the submarine will spend less time with its mast out of the water."

The new equipment will also include the ability to "plug-and-play" a Communications Intercept Suite antenna that will provide the class that capability. This is because the Universal Modular Mast has two multi-purpose ports – like data ports on a computer. This will enable other antennas and intelligence-gathering equipment to be swapped in and out to better suit the needs of a specific deployment or changing technology.

Here in Esquimalt, Deputy Commander -

Operations of Canadian Submarine Force, Commander Mike Mangin is encouraged by the upgrade and says the Universal Modular Mast will bring Canadian submarine communications capabilities into the modern era.

"It improves the Victoria class as an intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance platform," said Cdr Mangin. "It increases our utility so much, the upgrades to the comms fit that UMM enables could be compared to using an old dial up modem to one of today's high-speed modems."

Corner Brook travelled from its home port of Halifax for the contractor conducted extended docking work period and is expected to be completed in 2020. Work is expected to commence on the UMM install in HMCS Chicoutimi in 2019, with subsequent work to be performed on HMCS Victoria and HMCS Windsor.

The plan is to have all four submarines retrofitted with the new equipment by 2026.

Seamless Canada initiative progresses coast to coast

DND

Canadian Armed Forces members and their families are now one step closer to experiencing a "Seamless Canada", when they relocate across the country during the course of their careers.

Department of National Defence (DND) and

Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) representatives met with counterparts from all provinces and territories in Ottawa Dec. 5 and 6 to advance the Seamless Canada initiative, first initiated in the summer of 2018.

DND launched Seamless Canada on June 27 to improve the coordination of relocation services across the country, when CAF members and their families move to a different province or territory. The Ottawa symposium focussed on finding ways to streamline and enhance services across governments on issues specific to CAF members and their families.

CAF members are required to relocate across Canada throughout their careers. A Canadian Forces Ombudsman report released in 2013 found that relocation is a major cause of stress and strain for military families, who can expect to move three times more frequently than the average civilian over the course of a member's career in the CAF.

Specific concerns included access to healthcare, employment, child care and education, which all come under provincial and territorial jurisdictions.

The Ottawa roundtable discussions centred on health care, spousal employment, and education and childcare. Participants also worked on shaping the governance of the Seamless Canada framework and deciding on a strategic, long-term path to improving how military families can better transition between the provinces and territories.

The Seamless Canada working group will continue meeting regularly to improve services across provinces and territories in an effort to help ease the burden placed upon CAF members and their families when they relocate.
