Chief of the Defence Staff*DND

On Dec. 23, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau announced the upcoming appointment of Vice-Admiral Art McDonald, currently Commander of the Royal Canadian Navy, as Chief of the Defence Staff.

Vice-Admiral McDonald will be promoted to the rank of Admiral and replace the current Chief of the Defence Staff, General Jonathan Vance, who will be retiring from the Canadian Armed Forces.

Vice-Admiral McDonald became Commander of the Royal Canadian Navy in June 2019. Before his appointment, he commanded Maritime Forces Pacific / Joint Task Force Pacific, the Fifth Maritime Operations Group and HMCS Halifax. Through these and other naval roles, he circumnavigated the globe, led sea-based humanitarian and disaster relief operations, and commanded a multinational task group in the High Arctic.

In his new role, Vice-Admiral McDonald will oversee the Canadian Armed Forces' ongoing operations in Canada and around the world, and their contributions to the national response to the COVID-19 pandemic, including support for Canada's vaccine rollout through Operation Vector.

The Prime Minister thanked General Jonathan Vance for his years of distinguished service leading the Canadian Armed Forces. General Vance will continue to serve in his role until the appointment of the new Chief of Defence Staff takes effect at a Change of Command ceremony to be held this week.

"At home and abroad, Canadian Armed Forces members have always answered the call of duty, working day in and day out to keep us and our loved ones safe. Vice-Admiral Art McDonald brings decades of experience in a variety of command and staff roles, and I am confident that he will provide dedicated leadership to the Canadian Armed Forces as they continue to respond wherever is needed to protect Canadians and our values," the Prime Minister said in a press release.

Rear-Admiral Craig Baines has been promoted to Vice-Admiral and will replace Admiral McDonald as Commander Royal Canadian Navy following the change of command this week.

HMCS Halifax departs for six-month Operation Reassurance deployment

Ryan Melanson
Trident Newspaper

A new year brought a new mission for the ship's company of HMCS Halifax, who left homeport on New Year's Day to join Standing NATO Maritime Group One (SNMG1) as part of a six-month deployment to Operation Reassurance.

The departure marks the 15th consecutive deployment in support of the NATO assurance and deterrence mission in European waters, with Royal Canadian Navy ships maintaining a consistent presence since 2014.

Halifax will operate with its NATO allies in Western and Northern European waters – they're set to conduct an intense program of operational patrols and training exercises, maintaining NATO's presence in key regions while also building on their ability to work in concert with the multinational vessels that make up the SNMG1 task group.

"This is our commitment to our NATO partners that we will continue to work with them, to learn how to better work together, and to assure them Canada will be a committed partner now and into the future," said Cdr

Chris Rochon, Halifax's Commanding Officer, while speaking to media prior to departing.

He was backed up at the podium by Cmdre Bradley Peats, who'll be joining the ship in Europe as Canada assumes command of SNMG1 for the duration of the deployment. Cmdre Peats will take over as Commander SNMG1, while Halifax will serve as the task group flagship, replacing the Portuguese Navy ship NRP Corte-Real.

It's an exciting time for Halifax, but it's also an anxious time for sailors and their families, Cdr Rochon added. The unique nature of this deployment was accentuated by the lack of family members at the jetty for the send-off, with COVID-19 restrictions barring the usual large gathering. The ship has been planning extensively since March, and without downplaying the legitimate worries and risks associated with the pandemic, Cdr Rochon said he's confident his crew will be kept safe and healthy.

"COVID challenged us to adjust our training, technical, and personnel management in ways we would have never imagined. In the face of this challenge, this team has thrived and succeeded."

For the majority of sailors, the biggest change will be the lack of along-side visits through the six-month trip. Getting off ship and exploring foreign ports is typically a big bonus on this type of extended deployment, and has been made impossible due to the global nature of the pandemic. This means spending even more time on board, said PO1 Joyce Farmer, who tried to put a positive spin on the situation.

"We'll be very enclosed, but as a navy family we are going to have to keep ourselves entertained," she said. "We're going to work out, get to know each other, keep in touch with our families, and have a lot of time to ourselves."

Halifax will join their SNMG1 allies in the coming days, and Canada will officially assume command of the task group following a ceremony in Lisbon, Portugal, on Jan. 18.

WHAT SAY WE

MESSAGE FROM THE CHIEF OF THE DEFENCE STAFF

Upcoming appointment of the new Chief of the Defence Staff

I would like to offer my heartfelt congratulations to Vice-Admiral Art McDonald on his upcoming appointment to succeed me as your Chief of the Defence Staff.

Vice-Admiral McDonald is an excellent leader who will continue to lead the men and women of the Canadian Armed Forces with distinction.

I know he will enjoy the support of all Defence Team members across the organization.

Over the next several days, we will set the timeline and process of transferring the responsibilities of my office to Vice-Admiral McDonald. Though we remain in a COVID environment, details for a change of command ceremony will be communicated in due course.

It has been my great honour to serve Canada and Canadians, the men and women in uniform and your families. I am proud of what we have accomplished together over the last five years. I will proudly continue to serve until I have transferred my duties to Vice-Admiral McDonald.

WELL-KNOWN TRIDENT EMPLOYEE SAYS

goodbye

editors chair

Margaret Conway
CFB Halifax Base
Public Affairs Officer

Virginia Beaton, editor of CFB Halifax's Trident newspaper, has retired.

She began working as an assistant editor and reporter for the Trident in 2002, and then moved into the primary editor role in 2009.

She began her working career as a classical musician after receiving both bachelor's and master's degrees in music. She played flute in pit orchestras, on radio programmes, on track recordings for film, and anywhere else her services were in demand.

When on a job with CBC, a staff member asked her if she'd done any writing/broadcasting. She had not, aside from all of the research and writing she'd done as part of her master's degree but was interested in giving it a try.

This leap of faith led to a 10-year career as a freelance writer.

"It paid well, and you could do it on your own time," she said, noting that was an important aspect of the job since she had a child at home.

In 2002, she was made aware of an opening at the Trident Newspaper office. She knew nothing about the Canadian Armed Forces or the Royal Canadian Navy but was willing to take her chances. Eighteen years later, she has no regrets, noting the pride she feels doing this work.

"My father was in the RCMP when he was a young man. Although he passed away before I took the job with the Trident, I think he would have been proud of me."

After an incredible run at the helm of the Trident, she retired at the end of December.

The accolades and farewells were quick to flow in.

This testimonial from a dear friend and fellow Defence Team member Mike Bonin sums it up nicely: "I remember the challenges you faced square on and how you adapted and overcame them. Situations like staff reductions, budget cuts, personal and family tragedies, changing printers, adapting to new formats, creating a new look and feel, [or] going digital in spite of IT restrictions did not deter your determination or resolve. Not only did you survive, you thrived. You showed us that a newspaper is more than paper and ink. You encouraged people to submit articles and photos, making the paper be not just a part of PSP, but in fact, an extension of the military and civilians who work in this area. You showed us your warm friendship and concern for other people's lives and families. You created a vehicle to tell the navy's story and along the way, you produced a paper that won streams of accolades and national awards!" Retirement won't keep her idle.

"You have to keep learning. You have to accept that you can't stay where you are. You have to keep changing, and if you can do that and keep a positive attitude, that can lead you to a really good, productive life with a lot of opportunity to do worthwhile things."

DRDC SETS AMAZE-ING GOAL TO Reduce Greenhouse Gas Emissions IN ARCTIC FACILITIES

DND

A team of researchers is aiming to make Arctic facilities more sustainable through the Defence Research and Development Canada (DRDC)-led project, Advanced Microgrids towards Arctic Zero Emissions (AMAZE).

Defence buildings and assets in Canada's far north, including the North Warning System, use significant amounts of fuel for electricity and heating because of their remote locations and extreme cold conditions.

"This project, while targeting reduced fossil fuel use and greenhouse gas reductions, is also about maintaining or improving DND operations," says Dr. Gisele Amow, lead defence scientist. "Every litre of fuel that is not used is one litre of fuel that does not produce greenhouse gases or have to be flown, resulting in significant cost savings and yearly flight rates."

Key collaborators on the AMAZE project include DND's Assistant Deputy Minister Infrastructure and Environment, the Natural Resources Canada (NRCan)

CanmetENERGY Varennes laboratory, and the National Research Council Canada (NRC).

AMAZE builds on previous DRDC-led Arctic work with NRCan CanmetENERGY at CFS Alert, where roughly 1.8 million litres of fuel is consumed annually at its main power plant. Since fuel is delivered by heavy lift aircraft, it takes seven litres of fuel to deliver one litre of fuel to the site. The study identified energy savings, such as switching to LED lighting and building upgrades, that could save up to

The CAM-Main North Warning System Site at Cambridge Bay, Nunavut, is being considered for the deployment of the hybrid microgrid system under the AMAZE project.

37 per cent annual fuel use.

The AMAZE team aims to reduce greenhouse gases at North Warning System sites by developing hybrid microgrid systems that use multiple energy resources with advanced controls adapted for the north. Advanced microgrid control will provide intelligent load control and management of energy resources, whether the hybrid system is standalone or connected to a grid.

This project may include solar photovoltaics and more efficient fuel-based technologies such as variable speed generators, energy storage, and thermal energy management strategies. Variable speed generators improve efficiency because they change frequency to match power demand. Thermal energy management involves recovering waste heat from power generators to warm buildings or heat hot water.

CanmetENERGY will develop a simulation software tool to identify the best combination of technologies to use in Arctic locations where diesel generators are commonly used. As well, a microgrid test facility developed by the NRC will enable testing of individual technologies with advanced microgrid controls. The outcomes of AMAZE will also benefit other government facilities and remote civilian communities in the far north in reducing greenhouse gases.

Development and testing of the microgrid system will continue in 2021 with the goal to deploy at a North Warning System site in 2022.

A team of researchers is aiming to make Arctic facilities more sustainable with the Defence Research and Development Canada (DRDC)-led project, Advanced Microgrids towards Arctic Zero Emissions (AMAZE), which was awarded $1.65 M over three years from the Greening Government Fund in June 2020.
